Press Coverage | November 28, 2023

Collectors Fume Over CFPB Plan to Ban Medical Debt From Credit Reports

RELATED PROFESSIONALS

Kim Phan

Kim Phan, a partner with Troutman Pepper, was quoted in the November 28, 2023 American Banker article, "Collectors Fume Over CFPB Plan to Ban Medical Debt From Credit Reports."

"Conceptually, the CFPB is getting into a dangerous place, because they're saying medical debt doesn't have predictive value — and that's not their job," said Kim Phan, a partner at the law firm Troutman Pepper, who focused on privacy and data security. "The industry has the right to decide what has value and what doesn't."

…

Phan said that unless the CFPB scales back the proposal or makes changes, she expects the bureau will be sued by a trade group or credit bureau once a final rule has been issued. Taking medical debt off credit reports impacts a consumer's credit capacity, which is one of the seven factors of credit used in underwriting decisions, Phan said.

"If a consumer earns $30,000 a year and just took on $100,000 of medical debt, their capacity to take on new credit is much more restricted," Phan said.

RELATED INDUSTRIES + PRACTICES

- Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB)
- Consumer Financial Services

©2026 Troutman Pepper Locke