OVERVIEW

Angela draws on more than a decade of eDiscovery experience to guide clients through discovery in complex litigations as well as federal, state, international, and internal investigations.

Angela regularly advises on discovery issues in white collar defense and investigation matters in addition to matters related to antitrust law, CFIUS, FDA approvals, insurance and commercial litigation, and product liability. Her clients have included leading technology, life sciences, pharmaceutical, and consumer goods companies, as well as numerous other publicly traded companies.

Angela advises the firm's clients on critical and nuanced aspects of eDiscovery, including data preservation, data collection, data processing, document review, complex privilege issues, spoliation, privilege logs, and the strategic use of AI and technology in litigation. She helps clients manage complex matters more efficiently by applying AI and technology-assisted review (TAR) where they make the most impact. Her depth in privilege, privilege logs, and privilege law adds another layer of cost-effective, innovative problem-solving.

Angela has overseen numerous large-scale data collection and review projects and has managed large teams of attorneys, contract reviewers, technology/legal professional staff, and third-party vendors. Angela's leadership keeps discovery teams focused and moving through every phase while minimizing risks and maximizing efficiency.

In addition, Angela develops and implements playbooks, processes, and strategies for clients on data review and management and on the efficient retention, migration, and disposal of legacy and duplicative data, helping clients streamline their practices before disputes arise.
