OVERVIEW

Monica is a seasoned senior attorney who focuses on designing and executing efficient, defensible evidence and discovery workflows in complex business litigation and government investigations. She advises clients on every stage of the discovery lifecycle — preservation, collection, review, analysis, production — with experience rooted in both the legal and technical sides of the work: developing and implementing attorney-led artificial intelligence reviews, running review teams of 20+ attorneys, implementing TAR and predictive coding, and developing workflows across SEC investigations, business torts, and financial services disputes, among others. Monica brings that same depth of experience to large multijurisdictional matters and smaller, fast-moving cases alike. She also regularly manages discovery issues in matters overseen by court-appointed special masters, ensuring that processes and protocols satisfy heightened judicial scrutiny.

Known for a pragmatic, cost-conscious approach, Monica excels at developing discovery plans that leverage artificial intelligence and advanced analytics to reduce data volumes, streamline review, and enhance accuracy. She regularly collaborates with in-house counsel, IT teams, and external vendors to implement technology-assisted review, workflow automation, and defensible search methodologies that withstand scrutiny from courts, special masters, and regulators while controlling costs.

In addition to counseling on active disputes and investigations, Monica helps clients design scalable discovery and evidence management frameworks that align with their risk profiles, business objectives, and evolving regulatory expectations. Through this combination of legal judgment and technological insight, Monica delivers discovery solutions that are both strategically sound and operationally efficient, maximizing value for clients across a broad range of industries.
