In the second and final installment of our two-part Payments Year in Review series, Keith Barnett, Carlin McCrory, and Josh McBeain continue their discussion around the payments landscape of 2023 and their predictions for 2024.

In this episode, our co-hosts discuss the CFPB and FTC's attempts to regulate negative options, the Federal Reserve's FedNow, the adoption of Money Transmission Modernization Act in several states, Nacha's proposed risk management framework for credit push fraud, and state legislation concerning Earned Wage Access.

More information about 2023 regulatory developments can be found in our 2023 Payments Year in Review.
