Misha Tseytlin, leader of Troutman Pepper's Appellate + Supreme Court Practice Group, was quoted in the November 3, 2023 Law360 article, "3 November Argument Sessions Benefits Attys Should Watch."

Misha Tseytlin, attorney for Rudisill and head of the appellate and supreme court practice group at Troutman Pepper Hamilton Sanders LLP, said "life-changing benefits" are at stake for veterans in the statutory interpretation case.

"The Montgomery program offers you a monthly stipend. … [With] the post-9/11 program, that's a full ride. That's a life-changing opportunity that Congress intended to award to these veterans who serve in wartime, which the VA for a long time now has been denying them incorrectly," Tseytlin said.

Tseytlin said he was gratified that the Supreme Court took up Rudisill's case even in the absence of a circuit split: "I think it was the recognition of the importance of this case, to not only veterans, but the longest-serving veterans, those that served two or more periods of service," Tseytlin said.
