This panel of experienced antitrust attorneys will provide an update on the Department of Justice's and Federal Trade Commission's activities regarding no-poach and non-competition agreements and the repercussions of those activities in ongoing litigation and business' relationships with labor. In addition, one of our former federal prosecutors will share some of the latest developments in criminal antitrust enforcement and how they could impact corporate compliance and decision-making. The final subject covered by the panel will be the federal enforcement agencies' view on when state action should immunize potentially anticompetitive conduct.
