Eleventh Circuit Reverses Course and Holds a Single Text Message Constitutes TCPA Standing

The Eleventh Circuit has now joined seven other circuits in holding that receipt of unwanted text messages constitutes concrete injury for standing. On July 24, the Eleventh Circuit issued an en banc decision in Drazen v. Pinto, holding that a plaintiff who received a single, unwanted text message has standing to sue under the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA). The court departed from its earlier ruling in Salcedo v. Hanna, which held that a single unsolicited text message is but a "brief, inconsequential annoyance [] categorically distinct from those kinds of real but intangible harms" that confer Article III standing.
