Tracey Diamond, a partner in Troutman Pepper’s Labor and Employment Practice Group, is quoted in the The Washington Times article, “Biden Careful Not to Play Favorites, but Pfizer Enjoys Some ‘Comparative Advantage’ in Mandate Era.”

Tracey Diamond, a partner at Troutman Pepper law firm specializing in employment law, said companies have a practical interest in letting their workers choose from all the versions.

“Allowing employees a choice is best in case an employee has concerns about a particular vaccine because of any specific contraindications or religious concerns,” she said.
