“Going back several years, there was an anti-personal-use trend that ... impacted personal use by all executives, not just CEOs,” said Brinkley Dickerson, a partner at Troutman Pepper. Companies reconsidered this as the pandemic disrupted travel, he said, which has led to a “gradual increase” in CEOs’ personal use of corporate airplanes.

“Then we saw a relaxing on other officers as well, with COOs [chief operating officers] and CFOs the primary beneficiaries,” Dickerson said.
