

Podcasts | July 11, 2024

CFPB's New Interpretive Rule: Buy Now, Pay Later as Credit Cards

Payments Pros – The Payments Law Podcast

SPEAKERS

Chris J. Willis | Mark J. Furletti | Jason M. Cover | Joshua McBeain

In this special crossover episode of The Consumer Finance Podcast and Payments Pros Podcast, Chris Willis and Josh McBeain interview two colleagues who delve into the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's (CFPB) recent interpretive rule that classifies buy now, pay later (BNPL) transactions as credit cards. Mark Furletti and Jason Cover explore the implications of this rule under Regulation Z, including the introduction of the term "digital user account" and its impact on BNPL providers. The discussion covers the regulatory requirements, potential challenges for compliance, and the broader legal context, including the possible effects of the Loper Bright case on administrative interpretations. With a July 30 compliance deadline looming, the episode provides critical insights for industry stakeholders navigating this significant regulatory shift.

RELATED INDUSTRIES + PRACTICES

- Payments + Financial Technology
- Consumer Financial Services
- Consumer Financial Protection Bureau \(CFPB\)