Corporate espionage has greatly increased in recent years with the digitalization of the workplace and the shift to working from home. The frequent lack of direct oversight and ease of access to company systems by employees and others has made it easier than ever for individuals to take a company's most highly sensitive data and information and use it on behalf of another company, state actor, or even for their own benefit.

Corporate HR and IT Departments are often unaware of the extent to which company data is at risk until there has been a breach and litigation is either needed or has been initiated against the company.

This presentation is designed to teach attendees what they need to know in order to prevent the theft of their companies' most important data AND stop employees from using data from other companies. Implementing these steps effectively takes buy in from executives, IT, and operations personnel, and this program will provide practical guidance on this process from start to finish.
