AUSTIN – Casey Bell, a well-respected energy attorney and former Administrative Law Judge for the Texas State Office of Administrative Hearings, has joined Troutman Pepper Locke's market-leading Energy Regulatory Practice Group as a partner in the firm's Austin office. His significant experience in agency proceedings, corporate transactions, and litigation will further enhance the firm's ability to meet the evolving needs of its clients in the Texas energy market.

Joining Troutman Pepper Locke from Duggins Wren Mann & Romero, Bell brings close to 20 years of experience in public utility and administrative law, counseling clients on regulatory strategy, contested proceedings, and transactional matters involving electric utilities and energy market participants throughout Texas.

"Casey's proficiency with behind-the-meter power supply deals comes at a crucial time for our clients with energy projects in Texas," said Brandon Marzo, leader of the firm's Energy Regulatory Practice Group. "His deep understanding of state-specific energy regulations, combined with his comprehensive knowledge of tax equity transactions and regulatory structuring of renewable projects, will be extremely valuable to the firm's current capabilities and clients."

Bell counsels clients before the Public Utility Commission of Texas, Electric Reliability Council of Texas (ERCOT), and other state and federal regulatory bodies. He advises on compliance matters, utility rate cases, and project approvals, and brings deep experience in structuring energy deals that involve tax equity financing, renewable development, and behind-the-meter supply arrangements. Bell also supports clients with regulatory due diligence for M&A transactions and infrastructure investments across the ERCOT footprint.

"Casey is a partner with a well-rounded regulatory practice and will be a tremendous addition to both the Austin office and Troutman Pepper Locke," said Dave Foster, Austin office managing partner. "He will help us strategically grow our national energy presence, and his experience in both the public and private sectors will provide clients with a unique insight into the increasingly complex and constantly evolving energy regulatory landscape."

“Troutman Pepper Locke is home to one of the most esteemed energy practices in the country with a long-standing reputation of being at the cutting edge of market developments,” said Bell. “I look forward to contributing to the firm’s growth and success, and to working with my new colleagues to provide exceptional service to our clients.”
