In this episode of the Moving the Metal podcast, hosts Brooke Conkle and Chris Capurso delve into the Federal Trade Commission's (FTC) recent report to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). This report responds to the CFPB's request for information to aid in preparing its annual report to Congress. The episode provides an overview of the FTC's enforcement activities and regulatory efforts over the past year, emphasizing the agency's focus on protecting consumers from deceptive practices in the financial services and automotive industries. Key points discussed include the purpose of the report, the FTC's authority, a review of some litigation highlights, and how the CARS rule fits into the equation.
