With the passage of the Inflation Reduction Act in August 2022, many in the U.S. hydroelectric power industry are hoping for a significant boost to this “forgotten” renewable. And there are several provisions in the act that directly affect hydropower, all with the goal of making clean energy more affordable and accessible and strengthening resilience to climate change.

But what happens now? In this session, Troutman Pepper partner Anne Loomis and Peter Farrell of Baker Botts will discuss exactly how these provisions can help move the industry forward, where the opportunities are for growing hydro generation and what the long-term effects may be from this sweeping piece of legislation.
