Molly DiRago, a partner at Troutman Pepper Locke, analyzes how Thomas Klein's use of demonstratives helped Nissan prevail in a $42 million airbag trial in CVN Trial Technique Spotlight.

Automotive product liability trials are often won or lost on complex evidence, from engineering reports to accident reconstruction. Because of this, it's critical for attorneys on both sides of the courtroom to break down that complicated, often dry, evidence in ways that jurors can understand and, importantly, remember when they deliberate. In the latest episode of Trial Technique Spotlight, Molly DiRago, a veteran trial attorney and partner with Troutman Pepper Locke, spotlights how Thomas Klein's use of demonstratives helped clear Nissan in a $42 million airbag trial against the automotive giant.
