NEW YORK – LMG Life Sciences, the definitive guide to leading law firms and lawyers in life sciences, has once again rated Troutman Pepper as “Recommended” in the Product Liability category. Partner Tom Gallagher retained his recognition as a “Life Sciences Star” in the White-Collar/Govt. Investigations category, and Partners Barry Boise and Ray Miller ranked as “Life Sciences Stars” for the first time in the Product Liability and Patent Prosecution categories, respectively.

LMG Life Sciences bases its annual law firm rankings on three criteria: case evidence, peer feedback, and client feedback. Firms cannot pay to appear in the guide and can only be ranked if the market deems them worthy of consideration.

Troutman Pepper's Product Liability Practice Group offers a long track record of defending single-plaintiff cases, multidistrict class actions, and mass tort litigation involving serious personal injuries or catastrophic events. The firm's approach combines an in-depth understanding of clients' industries and products, as well as exceptional knowledge of their underlying science and technologies.

Troutman Pepper is highly regarded for its work in the life sciences space with attorneys representing clients across virtually every subsector of life sciences and healthcare. The firm regularly assists clients with developing and protecting new lifesaving therapies; structuring and completing transformative business combinations and alliances; complying with ever-shifting government regulations and enforcement actions; and defeating the largest and most complex litigation threats faced by a health care or life science organization.
