Please join Troutman Pepper Partner Chris Willis and his colleagues Caleb Rosenberg and Josh McBeain as they discuss a string of recent developments in small business financing at both the state and federal level, including the CFPB's small business data collection rule and the regulations under state disclosure laws.

Caleb Rosenberg focuses his practice on helping small business finance companies, banks, fintech companies, and licensed lenders navigate regulatory risks posed by state and federal laws. He has experience performing regulatory due diligence on financial technology companies and assisting clients in responding to regulatory inquiries.

Josh McBeain focuses on federal and state consumer and business lending and payments laws, while also counseling clients on state and federal laws applicable to the development of digital financial service products. To help advance his clients goals, Josh leverages his previous experience as in-house counsel to a major financial institution and while working at the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis.
