California's new climate disclosure laws impose significant new disclosure requirements for companies that do business in the state, with implications that will reach far beyond its borders. With initial rulemaking underway, and legal challenges in two courts, many companies are racing to understand how these new laws will affect their business.

Please join Shawn Zovod, Melissa Horne, and Jason Langford from Troutman Pepper Locke for a Q&A-driven discussion of California's climate disclosure laws and their implementation to date. This interactive panel of lawyers who are actively advising clients on these laws will feature practical questions among the panelists and real-world insights from their ongoing work.

Topics for discussion include:

- Key legal requirements
- Anticipated implementation and compliance timelines
- Outstanding applicability and compliance questions impacting stakeholders
- Current legal challenges to SB 253 and SB 261
- Practical advice for preparing disclosures in the face of uncertain legal outcomes and timelines
