A Troutman Pepper Impact Series

As changing market conditions and geopolitical risks continue to pose challenges for dealmakers, it can be difficult to identify and capitalize on opportunities. In this series, members of Troutman Pepper's Private Equity practice draw from their experiences in the marketplace to provide commentary, guidance, and predictions about the private equity industry.

Was 2022 a “down year”? It finished with solid deal volume in the private equity industry after the initial “deep breath” that followed a record-breaking 2021. In episode one, Troutman Pepper Partners Matt Greenberg and Jeremy Levy discuss the changes funds made to their approach to dealmaking in 2022, and forecast the ways in which inflation control and the potential increase in market certainty may impact deals in 2023.
