David Kirk, a partner with Troutman Pepper, is quoted in the Alpharetta-Roswell Herald article, "Roswell City Council Approves Verizon Data Center Expansion."

On March 14, David Kirk with the law firm Troutman Pepper Hamilton Sanders said Verizon has since made substantial modifications to its initial plans. Now, rather than housing three 18,100-square-foot pods with two diesel generators each, the facility will only have two pods built in phases. The land on the southern half of the property where the third pod had been proposed will not be developed.

Kirk said the equipment yard in the back of the building on the western side of the property will be enclosed with 16-foot masonry screen walls, and a brick screen wall will be installed in the front of the building along the equipment yard.
