Eric Kline, a partner in Troutman Pepper's Corporate Practice Group, is quoted in the Pittsburgh Inno article, "Seattle Investor Seeking a Pittsburgh Deal Talks SPACs at PVCA Event."

Michael Butler, CEO of Cascadia Capital LLC, and fellow participants Lynn Kirkpatrick, CEO of San Diego-based Ensysce Biosciences, which went public via a SPAC, and Eric Kline, a partner at law firm Troutman Pepper, addressed the theme of SPACs as a financing source for tech companies.

SPACs are public companies that attract funding from investors anticipating that the SPAC will buy potentially valuable assets from another company, Kline explained.
