Still, the issue isn’t completely settled, as the Supreme Court’s ruling left open several questions, including whether a plaintiff may nevertheless survive the pleadings stage on the autodialer question or whether it’s enough for the device used to place the call to merely have the “capacity” to use a random and sequential number generator, according to David Anthony, a partner at Troutman Pepper.

“Courts have already begun to weigh in on these questions, and many more are sure to do so in 2022,” Anthony said.
