The size of the MDL is also a possible reason why there have been so many bellwether trials, Cohn said. She noted that in her experience around four bellwethers is enough to reach some sort of global resolution, and that more cases may need to be tried until there’s a clearer trend in favor of either plaintiffs or 3M to get a sense of the value of the litigation.

“But it is unique, in a sense, how many ‘bellwether cases’ there have been,” Cohn said.
