Troutman Pepper Partner David Dove was quoted in the Law360 article "Troutman Pepper Adds Chief Counsel to Ga. Gov."

"I've been here, all through COVID and just a lot of different events throughout the administration," Dove said in an interview with Law360 Pulse on Thursday. "I was in private practice before I took this role. I knew that I wanted to go back to private practice. And when I began kind of considering that I was looking at firms that would really have a platform where my expertise and their platform and client base would really make a lot of sense. Troutman met and exceeded my expectations in that regard."

"[The water cases are] something I'm very proud of and something that's been quite unique to my practice here, and I think translates well to a variety of contexts in private practice. Clients face major ... litigation or transactional or regulatory hurdles, I've been in a position where my legal acumen has been depended on to deliver a very meaningful result," Dove said.

...

"I do believe that Georgia is going to be the epicenter for a tremendous amount of economic investment moving forward. I think I'm uniquely qualified [for] when companies are looking to invest in this state and need sound legal counsel to ensure that their investment's managed properly," Dove said. "That's something I'm looking forward to in the private sector."
