ATLANTA – Troutman Pepper was part of a national trial team that notched a defense verdict following a 10-day jury trial in a multi-revision pelvic mesh case in federal court in California. Troutman Pepper has represented this global pharmaceutical and medical device client in the litigation for over a decade, serving as lead trial counsel as well as being part of the national discovery team.

Troutman Pepper Partner Eric Rumanek served as trial counsel and Associate Brett Tarver played a key support role working with both fact and expert witnesses.

Troutman Pepper's leading life sciences and health care practice counsels clients at all stages of the health care continuum – from drug development to clinical care – from emerging biotech to global pharma. The firm takes an integrated, interdisciplinary approach to counsel clients' complex, evolving needs, providing critical support including intellectual property prosecution and litigation, corporate finance and governance, privacy and cybersecurity, litigation, regulatory, and enforcement.
