REGULATORY DEVELOPMENTS

REGULATORS LIKELY TO FOCUS ON HYBRID TRANSACTIONS AND IOT DEVICES

By Stephen Piepgrass and Daniel Waltz

Hybrid Transactions

Consumers used more connected devices in 2020 than any year before it. As daily routines adjust, consumers spend more time at home, and as technology continues to evolve, consumers have quickly adopted smart devices to keep them connected to a wide variety of specialized services through the Internet of Things (IoT). One pre-pandemic study predicted that more than 31 billion IoT devices would be in use at the end of 2020 (up from seven billion in 2018), and as many as 75 billion devices will be connected by the end of 2025. Industrywide, IoT devices manufacturers are operating in a new frontier — both industrially and legally.

A TALE OF TWO CONTRACTS: BASIC CONTRACTUAL PRINCIPLES TANGLING UP THE WEB OF THE TOBACCO MASTER SETTLEMENT

By Agustin Rodriguez and Dascher Pasco

In December 2020, the Florida Supreme Court refused to take up R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company's (Reynolds) appeal of a ruling requiring the company to continue to make annual tobacco settlement payments to the State of Florida. The Supreme Court's refusal to hear the case leaves in place, in perpetuity, Reynolds's obligations to make payments under Florida's 1997 tobacco settlement agreement on the volumes of certain cigarette brands that Reynolds no longer owns — having sold these brands to ITG Brands LLC (ITG) in a 2015 asset purchase. As a result, Reynolds's parent company, British American Tobacco (BAT), took a $555 million charge and stands to owe more than $75 million per year in unanticipated settlement payments going forward.

NEW AG ON THE BLOCK: NEW HAMPSHIRE ATTORNEY GENERAL JOHN FORMELLA

By Chris Carlson and Bonnie Gill

On March 3, Governor Chris Sununu nominated John Formella to be the next attorney general of New Hampshire, following the confirmation of former Attorney General Gordon MacDonald as chief justice of the New Hampshire Supreme Court. Formella has served as legal counsel for Governor Sununu since 2017, advising the governor and working with the New Hampshire Department of Justice and executive branch officials on significant legal issues affecting the state. In that role, Formella collaborated on initiatives to improve the state's health care system, enhance the state's response to the opioid crisis, reform criminal justice, and combat the COVID-19 pandemic.
