ALCOHOL REGULATION AS A MODEL FOR CANNABIS REGULATION: THE BENEFITS AND DRAWBACKS

By John West, Agustin Rodriguez, Christina Sava, Nick Ramos, and Chelsey Noble*

The rapid evolution of the cannabis industry in the United States poses many unique questions, the most interesting of which is what cannabis regulation will look like under federal legalization. Although (legal) cannabis is a brand new industry, it is not the first time the United States has come out of a prohibition era. The cannabis industry can learn from the regulatory schemes governing the alcohol industry to assist with a smoother transition into an era where recreational use of cannabis is no longer a taboo in our society. This article provides an overview of the current regulatory systems for both industries, the key regulatory agencies, the merits of the alcohol industry's three-tier system as a model for cannabis, and the applicability of direct-to-consumer (DTC) alcohol laws to cannabis.

VIRGINIA CANNABIS CONTROL ACT: A TALE OF TWO LEGISLATURES

By Agustin Rodriguez and Christina Sava

It was the best of times... the passage of the Virginia Cannabis Control Act (CCA) in 2021 was celebrated by many as the first bill in the South to legalize adult-use cannabis (read about the status of cannabis programs in other Southern states here). It was also heralded as the success of a Democrat-controlled legislature and of outgoing Democratic Governor Ralph Northam. Few people understood, however, that many portions of the CCA required ratification by the 2022 Virginia General Assembly, which ushered in a Republican majority in the state's House of Delegates and a Republican governor. This new General Assembly failed to reenact any portion of the CCA during its 2022 session. Although it seems likely that Virginia will move forward with an adult-use cannabis program at some point in the future, we no longer know when that will occur or what the program will look like. This post explores which provisions of the CCA are defunct and which have become valid law.

PREPARING COMPANIES FOR A NEW DAY IN MULTISTATE AG INVESTIGATIONS

By Ashley Taylor, Stephen Piepgrass, and Ryan Strasser

Until the early 2000s, companies developing innovative business models or technologies could make reasoned predictions regarding how their innovations would be treated by government by analyzing the text of statutes and implementing regulations and interpreting case law, enabling them to make calculated decisions about how to proceed based on risk tolerance.

BIPARTISAN COALITION OF 31 STATE AGS URGE FDA TO DENY MARKETING AUTHORIZATION FOR NON-TOBACCO NICOTINE PRODUCTS

By Michael Jordan, Chris Carlson, Agustin Rodriguez, and Bryan Haynes

On June 10, a bipartisan coalition of 31 state attorneys general, led by Idaho, Illinois, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania, sent a letter to Food and Drug Administration (FDA) Commissioner Dr. Robert M. Califf, asking the agency to reject premarket tobacco product applications (PMTAs) for all products that contain nicotine not derived from tobacco, also known as non-tobacco nicotine (NTN) or synthetic nicotine.

FDA SET TO PROPOSE MAXIMUM NICOTINE LEVEL IN CIGARETTES

By Nick Ramos, Agustin Rodriguez, and Bryan Haynes

The US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) recently announced plans to publish a proposed rule that would establish a maximum nicotine level in cigarettes and certain “other combusted tobacco products.” At the moment, it is not clear what “other combusted products” FDA might have in mind. According to the Spring 2022 Unified Agenda of Regulatory and Deregulatory Actions, FDA is targeting May 2023 to issue the proposed rule, but that could always change. Even if FDA were to issue the proposed rule in May 2023, the public notice and comment and rule finalization process will take much longer. Given the impact any final rule would have on the tobacco industry, it is likely many industry members will be very involved in the process and potentially challenge any final rule in court. Thus, it will be years before any rule takes effect, if ever.

NORTH CAROLINA BEER LABEL REGULATION RULED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

By John West and Matt Fay

A North Carolina (NC) federal judge recently ruled a NC Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) Commission regulation as an unconstitutional restriction on free speech. The regulation’s challenge occurred after the ABC Commission denied Flying Dog Brewery’s request for label approval on the basis the proposed label was in “bad taste” and “inappropriate.”
