Risk and compliance teams are familiar with potential enforcement from federal regulators. But action from state attorneys general (acting alone or in coalition) can take the unsuspecting business completely by surprise. And in recent years, those actions have grown more frequent, and the penalties more severe.

In this article published in Corporate Compliance Insights, Ashley Taylor and Chris Carlson, attorneys in Troutman Pepper's State Attorneys General Practice Group, provide tips on how to minimize exposure to enforcement from state attorneys general.
