Brandon represents major utilities in complex matters involving regulatory approvals. He proactively engages with clients in the early phases of projects to develop and understand their strategic objectives, as well as plan for any potential obstacles they may face.

OVERVIEW

Brandon helps utilities shape and implement strategies to help them achieve their business goals. He is widely recognized for effectively representing clients in matters involving regulatory approvals before state commissions. Brandon has particular experience working on projects involving integrated resource planning; certifications of new generation, including new nuclear generation; rate cases; RFPs for purchase power; certifications and RFPs for renewable resources; and qualifying facility contracting processes. Brandon has also helped clients with their regulatory matters in the natural gas industry, and specifically in Georgia's deregulated retail natural gas market.

Brandon, who has been top-ranked by Chambers USA since 2009, brings an informed, inside perspective to his practice. Before joining the firm, he served as an attorney for the Georgia Public Service Commission, where he focused primarily in the area of natural gas regulation, including matters involving state retail deregulation, pipeline safety and violations of consumer rights. Prior to that, he worked as an attorney with Georgia's Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs; he later assisted the governor and legislators with the development of the Consumers' Relief Act of 2002.
