Bryan's extensive experience in intellectual property litigation and trade compliance, including representing major clients in more than 30 states, administrative tribunals, and international courts, makes him a go-to counsel for complex legal challenges.

OVERVIEW

Bryan focuses his practice on intellectual property litigation, advising clients on patent, trademark, and copyright infringement, as well as trade compliance and competition issues.

A former trial attorney with the U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, Bryan serves as regional and national litigation counsel to clients in courts across more than 30 states, Canada, and the EU, as well as before various administrative tribunals, such as the International Trade Commission (ITC). He assists clients ranging from startups to multinational manufacturers in patent enforcement, international patent portfolio development, and compliance with U.S. and international trade laws. Bryan has extensive experience in both prosecuting and defending high-stakes intellectual property and competition cases.
