OVERVIEW

Derek represents companies as well as their corporate officers and directors in high-stakes disputes and government investigations. His clients include both public and privately held companies in sectors such as finance, food and beverage, health care, and telecommunications.

In addition, Derek handles litigation in state and federal court involving a range of claims, such as breach of contract, business torts, and cybersecurity. He defends clients in government actions, including investigations and subpoenas, handling matters before the DOJ, SEC, and FDA, among others. Derek also advises corporate leadership on proactive risk mitigation strategies and conducts internal investigations.

Derek also maintains an active pro bono practice. He represents clients in housing, immigration, domestic relations, and veterans' benefits matters and was involved in the briefing of a landmark Voting Rights Act case heard by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Derek is a veteran who achieved the rank of captain as a transportation officer in the U.S. Army before attending law school.
