OVERVIEW

Di'Vennici counsels clients on the registration, licensing, and enforcement of intellectual property rights with a focus on trademark, copyright, and advertising matters. He works with clients to legitimize and protect their intellectual property, including clearance, registration, portfolio management, licensing, and enforcement, all in view of practical objectives.

During law school, Di'Vennici served as an executive editor on the Journal of Law and Social Change, participated in the Detkin Intellectual Property & Technology Legal Clinic, and represented the Black Law Students Association during the 2023 Pan-Africa Summit hosted in Accra, Ghana.

Before attending law school, Di'Vennici responded to global data requests at a prominent technology company. While in college, Di'Vennici served as president of the Stanford NAACP, board member of the First-generation and/or Low-Income Partnership (FLIP), and research assistant in the Psychology Department.
