John focuses his practice on complex construction-related matters, representing clients in state and federal court litigation, domestic and international arbitration, project counseling, and contract negotiations.

OVERVIEW

John has spent the last decade representing project owners, EPC contractors, design-builders, general contractors, and specialty subcontractors in complex construction disputes arising from a variety of large-scale construction projects across the United States and abroad. He has represented clients in disputes arising from the design and construction of mass transit systems, renewable energy projects (including wind, solar, and hydropower projects), fiber optic networks, manufacturing facilities, hotels, and other large commercial and industrial buildings. John has extensive experience in state and federal courts and domestic and international arbitration proceedings.

Beyond dispute resolution, John counsels clients in the drafting and negotiation of construction contracts. He leverages his disputes experience to provide valuable counseling to clients throughout the project lifecycle, advising clients on claim and defense strategies, dispute avoidance, strategic negotiations, and informal dispute resolution.

John is a member of the American Bar Association's Forum on Construction Law and is active in the forum's Litigation and Dispute Resolution division. He frequently writes and presents on developments and emerging trends in construction law.

John is active in firm recruiting and mentors junior associates. He also leads the Construction practice group's Knowledge Management and AI initiative.

Outside of the office, John is active in his alma maters' alumni associations, including the St. Joseph's Preparatory School President's Advisory Council and the Harvard Varsity Club.
