John is an insurance attorney with nearly two decades of experience defending life, property and casualty, commercial general liability, disability, and long-term care insurers in complex litigation while counseling carriers on regulatory, compliance, and transactional matters.

OVERVIEW

John advises and represents major national insurance companies, focusing on complex litigation and regulatory matters. He brings nearly two decades of experience to Troutman Pepper Locke's Insurance + Reinsurance Litigation practice, having handled insurance cases in numerous federal and state courts and arbitrated matters domestically and before international panels.

John represents life insurance companies in disputes over claims obligations, lapse issues, and policy validity, including material misrepresentation claims and other instances where policies were improperly obtained, including matters touching questions of insurable interest and other manners of fraud. He also defends carriers in the long-term care insurance industry in claims litigation, and has significant experience representing and defending issuers of property and casualty, commercial general liability, and fidelity bonds against claims relating to coverage obligations, including those with allegations of bad faith claims handling and violations of various state unfair trade practices acts. His industry experience extends to environmental insurance counseling, analyzing coverage under liability insurance policies, defending against RICO claims, and structuring corporate transactions.

John has represented companies in complex litigation beyond insurance matters, both at trial and before domestic and international arbitration panels, focusing primarily on software disputes. He began his career as a corporate attorney, experience that informs his work counseling insurers and brokers on corporate, transactional, compliance, and governance matters alongside his litigation practice. Best Lawyers has recognized John as "One to Watch" in insurance law.
