With a strong track record of litigating hundreds of cases in state and federal courts, Matt is known for his responsiveness and his high degree of technical ability. He has tried dozens of cases to verdict.

OVERVIEW

Matt's trial experience includes individual and class employment cases, noncompetition and trade secret litigation, complex business litigation, shareholder litigation, product liability, and mass tort litigation.

Matt has been highly rated by Chambers USA, which noted that he "stands out as a massively experienced litigator with a strong track record in cases connected to the health care and life sciences arenas," that his strengths are his "quickly expedient responses to client queries and technical ability to deal with tricky contract negotiations," and that he is "a very effective litigator and has great insights into the issues of a case."

Matt represents employers in state and federal labor and employment litigation involving claims of discrimination, wrongful discharge and defamation, as well as other related disputes. He also represents employers in litigation to protect confidential information and trade secrets and to enforce restrictive covenants. Matt is also a trusted advisor to clients on complex termination and discipline decisions, the evaluation of risks associated with employment disputes, and likely outcomes in employment, restrictive covenant, and trade secret disputes.

Matt regularly conducts internal investigations on behalf of clients on employee relations matters, including assertions of discrimination, retaliation, and violation of company policy or government regulations affecting the client's business. He also advises clients on actions to take in light of the outcome of internal investigations.

Matt frequently speaks and presents articles on trial advocacy and a wide variety of labor and employment matters.
