OVERVIEW

Kay Deming practiced for more than 30 years as a litigating attorney specializing in the defense of complex product liability actions involving personal injury claims, many of which concerned specialized and technical areas of science and medicine. Her practice required the development of knowledge and fluency in medical, epidemiological, and other scientific disciplines, as well as contacts with numerous reputable experts in these scientific fields.

Kay's experience included the management of mass tort claims. These cases required special admission to practice in various state and federal courts in jurisdictions outside Georgia, including Alabama, California, Florida, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Her trial practice involved pharmaceutical litigation, including products liability litigation, and other general products liability cases of varying degrees of complexity and sophistication.
