OVERVIEW

In nearly 20 years at the Department of Justice and a U.S. Attorney's Office, Peter led both an office and investigations, argued before judges and juries across the U.S., and successfully handled a series of high stakes matters. His experience spearheading criminal and civil government investigations aids clients in navigating regulatory enforcement and compliance challenges.

Peter most recently served as the U.S. Attorney for the Middle District of Georgia, where he led the federal law enforcement activities across 70 counties, addressing the needs of a diverse population of approximately two million people. His role included membership in several Attorney General Advisory Committee (AGAC) subcommittees, focusing on critical areas such as cyber and intellectual property, terrorism and national security, violent and organized crime, and environmental justice.

Previously, Peter was the first assistant U.S. Attorney, where he managed the office's Criminal, Civil, Appellate, and Administrative Divisions, leading a team of more than 70 staff members across three branch offices. As an assistant U.S. Attorney in the Criminal Division, Peter was the lead prosecutor in high-stakes federal cases involving computer crimes, fraud, firearms, drugs, and terrorism. His experience with cyber-related crimes was recognized through his roles as the office's computer hacking and intellectual property prosecutor and national security cyber specialist. Peter's collaborative efforts with law enforcement agencies have been honored with awards from the Anti-Defamation League and the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

Peter's legal career began in the Department of Justice's Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch. There he defended executive actions and the constitutionality of acts of Congress in complex civil litigation as well as economic sanctions decisions made by the Treasury and State Departments. His early career also included a clerkship with U.S District Judge Hugh Lawson in the Middle District of Georgia.
