Robert L. Hickok

Retired Partner

OVERVIEW

In his practice, Bob was particularly interested in the application of economic analysis to resolve legal issues. He used economic analysis in antitrust cases (product and market definition and product pricing), federal securities law cases (the efficient capital market theory), and commercial contract cases (measure of damages). In addition, Bob had substantial experience in litigation concerning the application of various accounting principles and was interested in applying technology to information and litigation management.

Previously, Bob worked as a federal prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's Office in Philadelphia, where he conducted numerous fraud, corruption, and tax prosecutions. Bob was an adjunct professor at Drexel University Kline School of Law and Rutgers-Camden School of Law, where he taught courses in law and economics and professional responsibility.

A magna cum laude graduate of Harvard Law School, Bob was an editor of the Harvard Law Review and was one of two students in the second-year class awarded the Sears Prize for having the highest annual academic average. While at Harvard, he also received a master's degree in law and economics.
